The TIFF Commentary dated March 31, 2000 contains an essay entitled A Look Ahead — Part II that discusses (among other topics) the troubled state of K-12 education in America at the dawn of the new millennium. To help readers assess for themselves whether the essay's author is off-base in arguing that "America's elementary and secondary schools (private as well as public) are manifestly failing to prepare students to compete effectively in a truly globalized economy," we are providing the following bibliography of selected books and articles on K-12 education in America. Lest anyone think that this bibliography is consciously stacked against the status quo in the nation's schools, we hereby pledge to add to it any germane books or articles (pro- or anti-status quo) suggested by readers. Submissions should be sent to TIFF's president at dsalem@tiff.org.
